Golf Tournament & Silent Auction Raise Over $9000 for Scholarship Fund

The first annual Little Dolphin School Foundation benefit was a huge success, with 60 golfers playing during the day and 200 people at the dinner banquet and concert. Rick Charette had the little ones dancing at Sable Oaks while the adults bid on fabulous auction items including an ancient Egyptian mummy necklace, a professionally designed build-to-suit children's playhouse, a house rental in New York during holiday time, beautiful jewelry and artwork, a weekend shopper's getaway in Freeport, Red Sox tickets, and a beach house for a summer

Question: Is physical activity critical for the development of young children?

Answer: Yes, and in our information technology world, it is a greater challenge than ever. Young children need to move and play in peer groups, for both physical and emotional growth. Motor learning can be developed through games of organization and through gross motor activities that involve ground-based sports. While it is very likely that our kids will run circles around us in the future when it comes to computer literacy, it is critical that we insist that they are participants in physical education, and not just spectators.

Dr. Steven R. Brier is an Associate Professor in the Department of Sports Medicine, College of Nursing and Health Professions, University of Southern Maine and the Executive Director of The Little Dolphin School Foundation.
